A dismal turnout of just 889 voters elected Celeste Roscoe (511 votes) and Ken Mientkiewicz (455 votes) to the Romulus Community Schools Board of Education on Monday, June 10. Candidates Rendell Wooden and Troy LaPorte received 320 and 250 votes, respectively.

Summer Reading

The Romulus Public Library has begun accepting registrations for its free youth summer reading program. Through the program, which divides young people into "reader" and "read-to-me" groups, children will keep track of the amount of time they spend reading, and will receive various rewards for reaching milestones of five, ten, and fifteen hours.

Among the highlights of the program will be weekly entertainment events offered at 1 p.m. on Tuesdays or Wednesdays. A complete schedule of events is available at the Library. For more information, call 734-942-7589.

Tom Dolan, Director of Curriculum, recently announced that the Romulus Community Schools have again outperformed area charter schools on the Winter Michigan Educational Assessment Program (MEAP). This marks the second consecutive year that the district has significantly out-scored the charters on the annual statewide examination.

"Each year, we see a higher number of students returning to our school district from the charters," said Dolan. "Parents are becoming more aware of the academic performance in the Romulus schools and want to make sure that their children will have every opportunity to succeed in the future."

After learning of the MEAP results, Superintendent Joel R. Carr stated, "Our significantly higher scores over the past two years indicated that many of our specially designed programs work best for children in the Romulus area. The Romulus school district will continue to be competitive and offer the best educational program possible."

Carr attributed Romulus's superior MEAP performance to several factors.

"Our school district was the first in Michigan to achieve the new five-year Transitions accreditation rating from the prestigious North Central Association," noted Carr. "We have many extra resources to help children achieve high goals, including state-of-the-art technology, 26 reteachers who help tutor small groups of students, and individualized educational plans for all sixth- and eighth-grade students. We also have curriculum specialists, strand leaders, and grade-level coordinators who help insure that the curriculum is aligned with State of Michigan goals and benchmarks. These specialists have further designed entry and exit assessments for each class. This helps the staff to fine-tune instruction to best meet the needs of their students." □

Millage Approval = Tax Savings

The Romulus Board of Education has passed a resolution that will make winners out of special-education students, district homeowners, and the district itself, reports spokesperson Dick Kruse.

"On Tuesday, August 6, the Wayne County Regional Educational Service Agency [WCRESA] will be sponsoring a 1.5-mill charter millage increase throughout Wayne County," Kruse said. "The purpose of this increase will be to help fund rising special-education costs caused mainly by increases in the special-education population of the county."

WCRESA executives report that it can cost as much as $42,000 per year – with an additional $4,000 for transportation – to meet the required state and federal mandates for some high-needs special-education students. About 8,000 receive their education at 38 county-wide special-education centers; 44,000 county students (1 of 8) receive special-education services.

"The Board has passed a resolution in support of this WCRESA millage proposal, and has promised to lower the district's 'hold-harmless' millage by two mills (if the millage passes countywide) so that homeowners will get an overall .5-mill tax cut," said Kruse. "This would lower taxes $25 to $50 per year for the average homeowner."

Local Students, Firefighters Celebrate National Exercise Day

Halecreek Elementary students and members of the Romulus Fire Department were among millions of people around the country who celebrated National Exercise Day. The students and firefighters walked around the entire school several times to promote fitness awareness.

Getting Back What We Put In

Editor's note: This article is the first in a three-part series about the Rouge River from the City of Romulus. Watch for part two, "When the River Breathes, You Can Breathe Easier," and part three, "What Fertilizers, Motor Oil, and Dogs Have in Common," in our June 28 and July 26 issues, respectively.

Water. It's ever-present in our daily lives. Many of us tend to take water's availability and importance for granted—until it becomes scarce or, even worse, polluted beyond any safe and reasonable use.

In an effort to safeguard the water we depend on, a group of scientists has banded together to help us understand the impact that the Rouge River has on our daily lives—and the impact that we have on the river. Of course, like most scientists on a collective mission, this group has chosen a cumbersome name: The Rouge River Wet Weather Demonstration Project, or RRWWDP. However, the lengthy name doesn't dilute the importance of the group's mission, which is to enlist our help in cleaning up and protecting the Rouge River.

Romulus is one of 48 communities touched by the Rouge River and the RRWWDP project. Reaching as far north as Rochester Hills, the project embraces every community in between—a total of 438 square miles of land. This huge area is known as the Rouge River "watershed." (A watershed is an area of land that is drained by a river system.)

Rainwater falling in a watershed that doesn't evaporate or soak into the soil ends up in the river. The river currents pick up and carry a variety of things along the way. The words "Wet Weather" take into consideration at least some of the contaminants picked up and carried by the river currents. Household chemicals, lawn-care products, vehicle-care and -maintenance liquids, and yard waste enter the river through rainwater drainage.

The word "Demonstration" is a part of the RRWWDP name because a primary goal of this group of scientists is to share their knowledge with residents who live within the watershed area—residents who should take a vested interest in keeping the Rouge River clean for themselves and future generations.

Why take an interest in an environmental project that might seem larger in scope than our personal abilities?

A large part of the answer can be found simply through keeping track of one day's personal use of water. The morning shower (a rule of thumb is one gallon per minute) and the coffee-making ritual. The occasional glasses of tap water or sips from the water fountain during the day. Making the baby's formula. Cooking. Washing dishes. Washing the car, truck, or van. Doing the laundry. Watering the lawn.

Each of these seemingly simple uses of water can affect the health of the Rouge River. In so many words, we get back what we put in.

For example, the fertilizers we put on our lawns, once drained into the river, can actually promote the rapid growth of thick layers of algae and other plant life that eventually deplete the river of much-needed oxygen. Grass clippings and other yard refuse dumped near or washed down drainage sites often hamper the river's natural flow. And vehicle oil, antifreeze, and windshield-washing liquids illegally poured down drains pollute beyond safe use what we depend on for drinking water.

The scientists of the WRRDP are dedicated to helping us better understand the impact we as individuals and residents make on the Rouge River. They also want to help us understand some simple things that we can do to help the Rouge River become healthy again.

In the next two issues, we will provide some of these simple solutions in hopes that you will incorporate them into your daily life. One person can make a difference in the healthy preservation of our most precious and vital resource—water. □

Paying Attention To Details

Romulus Marketplace owner Ray Khami (left) and his wife Randa greeted Mayor Alan R. Lambert when he stopped in to assess the work that was being done in preparation for the store's opening.

By Steve Jones, Director of Public Relations, City of Romulus

The goal had been to open the doors to downtown Romulus's new Romulus Marketplace grocery store during the long, sun-drenched Memorial Day weekend. However, the grand opening was delayed. Why?

"Our goal has always been to make the store exactly right for our customers," said Ray Khami, Romulus Marketplace owner and general manager. "The short time frame of Memorial Day weekend would have been a rush and the details that will make our store the best it can be for customers might have been compromised. We thought it would be better to work through the Memorial Day weekend and get the details right."

"I think our customers will appreciate that attention to detail once they come in the door," he added.

Several months of long hours and hard labor have gone into the Romulus Marketplace. But it's obvious from the store's bright new look, wide aisles, and variety of products that this has been a labor of love for Khami, his brothers, and their father.

"You don't get into the grocery business if you don't enjoy being around people," Khami said as he energetically navigated his way through grocery aisles crowded with stacked boxes of products and product representatives scrutinizing how their merchandise looked on shelves. "I enjoy people and I know customers shop at a particular store not only because of certain goods or services, but because the people working at the store make them feel welcomed and important. That's a detail a lot of stores seem to miss these days. I can guarantee you, it won't be missed here."

Stopping by the store to assess the progress was Mayor Alan R. Lambert.

"This store is going to be a great addition to our downtown," said Lambert, looking at the new scanning check-out counters, bright and readable aisle markers, and large variety of stock being laid in. "What Ray, his brothers, and their father have done here represents the kind of quality the people of Romulus have long deserved."

Khami led the mayor to the back of the store. Several months ago, when work on the store was just beginning, the area was steeped in darkness. Now it is a bright, clean, deli department.

"Our deli is going to be the best," Khami said with obvious pride. "We're featuring LiPardi deli items. You can't get any better than LiPardi. And the people I've hired to work the deli are experts. They know the business, the products, and they're great with people. Like the mayor said, 'It's the kind of quality people in this community deserve.'"

Khami then showed the mayor the classically designed lantern lights that will be mounted on the outside of the store beneath the crisp green awning. Another bit of detail for the benefit of customers.

"We want it to be well lit for customers who walk here for groceries. Good, bright external lighting is important," Khami explained.

"This store represents way more than bringing convenient grocery shopping back to downtown," said Lambert. "This is a real tribute to the American family. Ray, his wife, brothers, and father all pulled together, made tremendous sacrifices, and never lost sight of building this dream together. That's what families do every day in our community. And that's just one of the many things that makes Romulus great."

The Romulus Marketplace is just the beginning of a dynamic new downtown. Along with the mayor, economic director Tim Keyes, and city planner Cynthia Lyon, Khami envisions a completely revitalized downtown that offers citizens a variety of services, entertainment, and dining options.

"Downtown Romulus has great potential," said Khami. "I'm just glad to be right here at the beginning of the downtown's incredible new life." □

Around the District

The enjoyable and informative orientation class conducted by master teacher Karen Richard for Barth's 2002-2003 kindergartners and their parents had young and old alike eagerly awaiting the start of classes in August. Program attendees received the district's prekindergarten "kit" to study over the summer to ensure an even faster start this fall.

Maureen Brennan's kindergartners at Cory received a thank-you visit from Kim Matthews (Romulus Animal Shelter), Mark Rosenthal (Animal Magic), and "Merlin" (a friendly Great Dane) for raising $141 for the animal shelter through a yearlong penny drive. The service-learning project gave the students a chance to practice counting and organization skills.

Middle School seventh-grader Garrett Lefler dunked his teacher, Lisa Handyside, five times with the 20 balls he purchased at a fund-raiser for nine-year-old leukemia sufferer Shannon Spicer. Police Liaison Officer Mike Jones supervised the dunk-tank activities.

Jets Enjoy Special Visitors

The Metro Jets, a basketball team at Metro Charter Academy of Romulus, has enjoyed visits from a couple of VIPs this year thanks to the efforts of attorney Leonard Mungo, a parent volunteer who developed the first-year team for fifth-graders.

On May 16, Agent James Dunlap, the man in charge of Michigan's Secret Service agents to the President of the United States, made time in his busy schedule to attend an assembly at the school and present the team with trophies. Earlier, during the regular season of play, Lieutenant Cornel Stafford of the Michigan State Police spoke to the team and took pictures with them.

The team's success was a pleasant surprise to many at the school.

"They entered the season very unseasoned," said Assistant Principal Fred H. Williams, "but, though they ventured out into a very competitive league, they added some sixth-graders and wound up taking third place.

"Principal Andrew Cook and Athletic Director Dave Hyvari are particularly proud of the students," he added. □
